Jan 2, 2018 James Darell/Getty Images There is good news for nearly 65 million Americans with gum disease (parody) disease. If you suffer from gum disease and need surgery, you may now be able to say goodbye to a mouth full of gauze and stitches after surgery. The FDA recently cleared a non-invasive laser treatment that makes parody disease surgery easier and less painful - and is used by more than 2,000 dentists nationwide. It's called PeriLase MVP-7, and it targets diseased bones and tissue with a tiny laser, killing bacteria to eliminate infection and inflammation. Its powerful laser then closes the gums to create the clean, closed environment needed to defend against future gum recession and promote reassessment of gum tissue. MORE: 9 Best Treatments for Gum Disease, but How Do You Know If You Have Or Are You At Risk of Gum Disease? The symptoms listed below can be subtle, but it is important to keep an eye on them and bring any changes to the teeth or gums to your dentist. If left untreated, not only can parody disease destroy teeth-supporting tissue, but it can also increase the risk of heart disease. Bleeding after brushing is a big sign and can signal gingivitis, says Lance Vernon, DMD, senior instructor at Case Western Reserve University School of Dental Medicine. Gingivitis is a mild form of gum disease that causes bleeding gums, especially after brushing or eating. Fortunately, it is usually reversed with daily brushing and dental floss, as well as regular cleaning of the dentist. There's also a certain smell that people notice, almost like alcohol or rotten apples, he says. When bacteria migrate under gum tissue where toothbrushes and dental floss can't get to it, bad breath can occur. It is important to treat it so that it does not progress to parodontitis, a serious form of gum disease that causes the gums to pull away from the teeth and form pockets that can become infected. MORE: How your drugs can make your teeth fall out 5 out of 10 plaque buildup A sticky film that forms on your teeth is called plaque (you can notice a white or yellowish substance between your teeth line of gums), and can accumulate and become calculus (hard, calcified deposits that must be removed by the dentist) without regular brushing and flossing. It also hides bacteria that can eventually lead to gum disease. Calcified plaque forms small shells above or below the gum line, which must be removed by a dentist, Vernon says. MORE: 7 Surprising Ways to Whiten Teeth Naturally 6 out of 10 Sensitive Teeth If you start to feel tooth sensitivity, it could mean you simply brush too much - or, it could be a sign that gum disease has progressed after a mild condition. When gum tissue recedes, it exposes the root of the tooth, which is less hard than the outer enamel, causing sensitivity, vernon says. 9 out of 10 Grinding or clenching your teeth If you gnash or clench your teeth – while awake or sleeping – you may be increasing your risk of developing gum disease. These actions put excessive force on the supporting tissues of the teeth, accelerating the rate at which they can become destroyed. 10 out of 10 Smoking habits Studies have shown that smokers have more limestone than nonsmokers, a precursor to gum disease. In addition, tobacco products damage teeth and gums, providing an open door to infection-causing bacteria that can lead to gum disease. 11 women with PMDD share what is really like a commercial - Read on below This content is created and maintained by a third party and imported to this site to help users provide their email addresses. Rich in vitamins A and C, red meat also contains lycopene (up to 20 million in two cups), a potential antioxidant against cancer. How to use it: It's sweet but not ultra-sweet and that's why it goes well with delicious food, says Ingrid Hoffman, host of Food Network's Simply Delizioso. She suggests these new twists:Cut the melon into pieces, dip them in spicy rum (of your choice), then freeze. When ready to eat, dust with sea salt and a little turbinado sugar. The sweet and salty combination with the icy texture is amazing, says Hoffman.Lightly coat the two-inch pieces with olive oil, then put on a sket and grill for 1 to 2 minutes on the side. (Use a melon that is only at its peak; overripe fruit will crumble when heated.) After grilling, top with fresh mint or basil and serve alone or over grilled white fish. A thin slice makes a great sandwich topper instead of tomatoes. Make sure you smear mustard or oil on bread to create a barrier so that the bread is not stiering, notes Hoffman.Tropical Watermelon Salsa 1 cup watermelon, seeded and cut into 1/4 inch cubes 1 cup mango, cut into 1/4 inch cubes 1 cup cucumber, seeded, peeled and cut into 1/4 inch cubes 1 jalapeno pepper, seeds and finely sliced 4 tablespoons lime juice 2 tablespoons finely chopped 1 teaspoon Italian parsley, finely choppedHow to make In a medium bowl mix all the ingredients and add salt and pepper to taste. Lightly muste to combine the flavors. Cover and cool for 30 minutes. The Roundup watermelon species have more than 1,200 varieties, about 300 of which are grown in the U.S. What's diff? The deeper the shade of red, the sweeter each bite. Here are some types to try. Sugar Baby Mala (about 12 pounds) round melon with deep red meat, dark green crust and black seeds. As the name implies, it's sweet and crunchy. Yellow doll round, small (about seven pounds), with soft-yellow meat, light-green bark with dark stripes and black seeds. A lighter shade means it's a less sweet tasting. The moon and the stars of the Inheritance Variety that is almost extinct. Slightly oblong, medium weight (about 25 pounds), with red mess and dark brown to whitish-yellow seeds. Sugar alcohols include sorbitol, xylitol, manitol and glycerol. These ingredients make up 98 percent of gums; the other two percent contains artificial sweetener, artificial paint, starch and preservatives. Wrigley's does not list the specific natural and artificial aromas used in Orbit. The colors and artificial sweeteners used differ depending on the taste of the gums; For example, the Original Bubble Gum flavor uses Red 40 and Red 40 Lake as artificial coloring. Its artificial sweeteners are aspartame and acesulfame potassium. The company does not specify a certain number of calories in its nutritional information, but states that each piece of Orbit contains less than five calories. The calories in Orbit come from sugar alcohols, and this small amount of carbohydrates is the only nutritious tridum found in Orbit. All orbital flavors are sugar-free. In addition to the Orbit brand, Wrigley's sells chewing gum under two related brands: Orbit for Kids and Orbit White. The children's orbit is available in original bubble tyres and grape flavours; Orbit White is available in Bubblemint, Peppermint and Spearmint flavors. The original orbital rubber is available in 10 flavors, including flavors based on cinnamon, mint and fruit. Mint orbit flavors include Spearmint, Peppermint, Wintermint and Sweetmint. Fruity flavors include Citrus, Apple Remix, Tropical Remix and Strawberry Remix. In a great lunch snack trading game, there are few items that have as much impact as violent pink or – if you're very lucky – tie-dye fruit roll-up. Although I still have a soft spot for plastic confectionery, I would hesitate to include it in my five-day number. Fortunately, you can get more fruit in the fruit bite by making your own. I've always had good success with this recipe from the Food Network, which requires:1 1/4 pounds of chopped fruit3/4 cups of sugar1 to 2 tablespoons of fresh lemon juice The idea is that you can take almost any fruit, mashed with sugar, add lemon juice to taste, and then boil it in a thick, fruity goop. This goop is then spread into a thin layer over parchment or silicone baking mat and dehydrated in a 200-degree oven until it can be peeled and sliced (about 3-4 hours). It's a pretty simple process, but there are some nuances I've chosen after doing a few series: Not All Fruit is Going to Behave Like You Expect It ToFruit is not a monolith, and various berries, apples and drupes all have different amounts of water, sugar and pectin. While the above blend of dragonfruit and peach had a wonderful taste, it resulted in a very thin mixture that required much more cooking than other fruit configurations. Cooking is not necessary. Conversely, the situation of blueberries and figs and balsams thickened into a slicable gel after only half an hour of sitting on the worktop. (Yes, you read it right: In the stroke of glow, I swapped lemon juice for balsamic vinegar and my life changed forever.) However, the strawberry and raspberry mixture – one pint of each berry – was platonic ideal in terms of cooking time and texture. Tie-Dye is a challenge If you want to go the multitone path, realize that you can not just start throwing different flavors together and expect to dehydrate everything at the same speed. As you can see from the photo above, I tried to combine all three of my flavors into one colorful strip, but the differences in viscosity resulted in an uneven, kind of lumpy roll-up, with some dragonfruit-peach segments crunchy just a touch. (It tasted very good, after all.) Enroll the other members of your board because we make fruit snacks, this does not mean that we only have to stick to fruits and fruits. As I mentioned before, balsamic vinegar gave my blueberry fig a nice, refined piece of acidity, but almond extract, vanilla and even black pepper can raise a once childhood favorite of something extremely ripe. Once you understand your flavors and fruit ratio – start with a mixture of 50/50 out of two fruits and adjust to go there - just add 3/4 cup of sugar, mix it and sauté it. Spread it out so that it is thin but not translucent, then dehydrate for three or more hours, until the top of the fruit skin is barely tasteless to the touch. Let it cool, peel it regardless of the inconspicuous material you use and cut it into sheets or strips. Roll it out in parchment, sew it up with a little twee cone and dole out to your favorite schoolchildren and adults. Adults.
